HONGKONG, TURBDAY, MAR. 16, 1880, In refusing to ratify the Livadia Treaty it may be argued by the Government of Peking with some show of reason that they are but following the lead of the English Government, for to a Chinaman the manner in which the Chinese signsture of the now famous Convention was obtained at Chefoo on Sept. 13th, 1876, and the subsequent treatment of that document must convey peculiar notions of English consistency. Apart from the pronounced jealousies which The usual bours will be observed in closing | Sir Thomas Wade's Agreement raised in the diplomatic body at Peking, the Chefoo Convention and its neglect doubtless had much to do with the almost total failure of the recent Conference of Foreign Minister, at the Chinese capital, But Sir Thomas was not censured, far less degraded, for the part he took in the forcible action of 1876, liere then, comes in the marked peculiarities of the Chinese case against the avowed author of the Treaty of Livadia. REVIEW.

don: Macmillan & Co., 1880. Though a short time, fourteen mouths would doubtless suffice to gain a fair knowledge of Canton, specially with the introductions to much of its inner. Chiness life, to which owing to her husband's position for some twenty years, Mrs Gray had free and frequent access. The letters to her mother, now just published, give many details of an interesting character in a chatty style, and will we doubt not, be read with pleasure and perhaps profit by those of her own sex especially, to whom the superficialities lady-life abroad, has many attractions from their novelty and quaint parade, and from which the sterner sex are generally excluded. Of course, there is no pretence in this volume to dive deep into the reasons of things or seek the secret springs of what to-day meet the eye in the Chinese family circle: while this is left for deeper thinkers and more recondite research, Mrs Gray generally gives the connecting links of the present with the past in the common folklore of the Lots were driven by the Color- it off as your own and only admit, when festivals or shows, would, we are inclined to think, have sufficed equally well as a dozen." In writing weekly to an anxious mother at home every little item helped to fill the sheet and please the parent, but it is not so with the public when they are admitted behind the scenes and who weary on needless repetitions. It is indeed no easy task for any one to put new life into repeated descriptions of dinner parties, pagoda, mosques, and temples, in which the one feature sought after that has taken place in Hongkong since its and prized is their consistent likeness. first introduction here by the 28th Regt. ledgment we unanimously and emphatically Yet where the representations are varied, The two teams were more nearly matched, or the god in question has a special relationship, the volume before us gives in general an interesting and faithful, sometimes vivid, account of the whole matter. 71bs. in favour of B. In the style of the writing we cannot but notice that constant disfigurement of time than eighteen mirutes and being alike which ladies are guilty with regard to trying to the mus les and staying powers of their mother tongue, in the intensitive "so" and "such," which without its correlative appears in all parts of the lowed, for namby-pamby English in print is always offensive, whether in "Our Journal in the Highlands" or "Fourteen Months in Canton." Mrs Gray also talks of cutting a thing "in half," a solecism in language and an impossibility in physics. To cut a thing into halves is often easy enough, but large number of civillan residents. The omission of the latter is a fault, of the former an offence. On the whole, however, we think this little volume a suitable companion of the Archdeacon's residing in the Colony :larger work. As the slipper boat to his junk, or the gig to his sloop, it may well follow in the wake of the latter, and carry what may be deemed some deficiencies of the larger craft.

To the Editor of the "ORINA MAIL." March loth, Sin, -When you quote an artice from the North China Daily News or any other paper is it your custom to acknowledge it at the time or to make a violent effort to palm there is a likelihood of your being exposed for plagiarism, that the work is somebody else's and not your own? A plain answer to this plain question would be interesting to many people in view of what took place last night at the Cathedral. When a man on the same day reads two printed sermons and acknowledges one only, there is something enspicious and unhappy in the fact of his not acknowledging the other, and when he comes forward next Sunday and reluctantly tells us that he thinks it is hardly fair that the work of another should be appropriated wholesale without a word of soknowagree that that is so. The moral of the whole story is that even in the pulpit there are as there are in other high places some slippery customers who require looking almost overlooked. Out go the mokes and get in line, then break and form again. They have to wait, for Chater's crack

"Braw Chiel" is "raising Cain:" "Black Satin" breaks sway; Don't hurry, "Harry," you must wait, for Coxon starts to day.

the probable commandant. The fighting Wivers was inspected in the Sound by the At last a start—The giant Cumahaw Already those who know him best, know he must lead the huut. Past the black rook he strides along at such a fearful pace That some look on and think the field all make a waiting race. Now hark I hear one say "Ab, that's a_ dangerous game to play ;" But the Jockey tries the game that proved successful yesterday He's gone to cut the running out, and make the pace so hot That he thinks they'll never catch him. and that he'll apset the pot."

Now on they come all riding-even as they pass the stand. For one and all the jookeys know they soon must be at hand; Still onward strides the glant, -still Ogle's sitting still. Though he sometimes works his bridle as he drives him up the hill. And good "Black Satin's" beaten, and "Driving Cloud's" near done. The Jocks are getting anxious and riding every one, Excepting him on "Cumshaw," he's calm and at his ease, For he knows he does not dare to move until the Final Squeeze,

What's this that's coming from the ruck ? tis Fohkien's "Driving Cloud" And "Strathavon's lockey's sitting tight and driving through the growd. How gamely " Braw Chiel " answers to Nickels vig rous call, How Lewis sets his teeth and rides the tiring "Tajmahal." They gain upon the leader, but can they catch him ? say and When collared with the giant race, and Lights up with hope as Bldwell titles to cut the leader down. Rip go the spure and crack the whip.

each nerve and sinew tried and gets to Cumenawa side But while they shout "Strathavon wins" LNO NO BOME OF DELLE He's shot his bold" and still uncampai hold !! Corneller! Wine the day, "Daving" Cloud " has some again And where the rout is passed Hos third and Chater's dresded three are fourth, and fifth and sat !! yay light blue and ross. And three for the mokes will straw and white three good and wallant foes And three times three and a tiger, and now just the cheer more . For the outside moke that licked the lot, for Henry's mauve and straw. -Shanghai Mercury
